The Secret life of a Librarian

Written by Anonymous
Excerpt courtesy of Guardian News & Media Ltd

I set out determined to change the world of public libraries. Nearly 40 years on, I've made the smallest dent. But I've met some amazing borrowers.

Public libraries seem to attract more than their fair share of what might be called "characters". There is never a dull moment in the life of a public library. We open our doors and anyone can come in, so we never know quite what to expect and every day is very different.

The only regret I have about my long career in public libraries is that I have not been able to convince more librarians that they should be less book-focused and more people-focused; that they should look outward to the community rather than inward to the library; that they should get rid of desks and counters and do more active roving inside the library and outside in the community; that they should put less emphasis on the excellence of the collection and more on providing books that people actually want to read; and, most important of all, that libraries should be community-led and based on the needs of the public they serve.

What I dislike most about the profession is its insistence on standards of excellence and a rule-bound culture which tends to exclude those for whom public libraries were founded in the first place – the deserving poor and, indeed, the undeserving poor as well. For it is a fact that libraries are used most by those who need them the least (the middle class) and used the least by those who need them the most (the working class).

The job has not changed fundamentally from when I started out. Libraries have been modernised through technology but their underlying strategies, structures, systems and culture remain the same. We have a plethora of rules and regulations, and the part of my job I dread the most is having to ban someone from the library, because usually they come from the section of society that needs libraries the most. But this is more than balanced out by the many pleasures of the job, which include helping borrowers to improve the quality of their lives and meet their needs – whether that is for books and information, or helping them to find a job or a roof over their head.

Calling all of our wonderful volunteers,

Spring is finally here and it's time to start thinking flowers!

The ADOPT A FLOWER BOX/BED program has been a success over the last four years thanks to great community support, so we're calling on our volunteers again this year.

Would you be interested in volunteering to care for the flowers in one (or more) of the boxes or beds located in various places around the village? The village provides the flowers, we just ask that you plant the flowers and maintain the water/ weeding for each box/bed that you agree to care for during the summer of 2017. Annuals are to be planted around the first or second week of June.

Please contact Amanda at 780-889-3774 or administration@villageofheisler.ca for more info, and if you are interested in volunteering to help maintain the beauty of our village.
